ANNOUNCEMENT: E-MAIL ADDRESSES

Most scientific communication among researchers and between authors and journals is now done by e-mail. Furthermore, the era of frequent changes in e-mail addresses seems to have passed. Therefore, it makes sense for authors to include e-mail addresses along with their postal addresses on the title pages of their papers. Such additions, effective immediately in both parts of the Journal and in the Supplements, are optional, but we encourage authors to make this inclusion.

We prefer the system used in the AAS Directory, namely, an initial letter indicating the network (I for Internet, B for BITnet, D for DECnet); please see the User's Guide to Electronic Mail & Network Services in the preliminary pages of the AAS Membership Directory for guidance. The initial letter is followed by a colon, a space, and the address.
